The Struggle for Human Rights and Democracy in Russia and Russians Abroad

Part of IERES's Behind the Headlines Series Co-sponsored by Russie-Libertés and the American Russian-Speaking Association for Civil & Human Rights

with

Alexis Prokopiev, Russie-Libertés

This presentation will examine the ways that human rights NGOs, like Russie-Libertés, prepare and develop their advocacy around the world in order to defend human rights in Russia. In particular, it will illustrate and evaluate Russie-Libertés' actions according to their impact. The speaker will examine the impact of several actions, including demonstrations, conferences, press releases, opinion polls, concerts, and forums. He will also compare actions and impact in different countries, since Russie-Libertés works with organizations in a variety of countries.

Alexis Prokopiev was born in Moscow in 1983 and moved to France in 1995. He earned a Master of Public Affairs at Sciences Po Paris in 2008. From 2007 to 2008, he served as Federal Secretary of Jeunes Verts (Young Greens France). Since 2012, he has been president of the association Russie-Libertés (France).

The George Washington University's Elliott School of International Affairs is one of the world's leading schools of international affairs and the largest school of international affairs in the United States. Located in the heart of Washington, D.C., its mission is to educate the next generation of international leaders, conduct research that advances understanding of important global issues, and engage the policy community in the United States and around the world. In the January/February 2012 issue of Foreign Policy, the Elliott School of International Affairs' undergraduate and master's programs were ranked among the top ten international affairs programs in the United States by the Teaching, Research, and International Policy (TRIP) survey.
